The Scorpion, (New Piratical Song) sung by MR. R. PAGET, for whom it was expressly written and composed. Words by EDWARD FARMER; Music by G. SIMPSON.

"The subject of this song, being the boast of a pirate, demands the spirited and energetic treatment which the composer has accorded to it. To a melody of great merit ore united suitable and well-conceived harmonies. The song has found an able interpreter in Mr. R. Paget, of Atherstone, who by his singing has created quite a sensation upon each occasion of its repetition.—Dramatic and Musical Review.

London: Campbell, Ransford, & Co., 53, New Bond-street, and may be had of Mr. R. Paget, Atherstone. Price 2s. 6d.

Treatise on the Theory and Practice of Musical Composition, by G. W. RÖHNOR.

 The First Part contains an exposition of scales and intervals; of the fundamental consonant and dissonant chords; and of other various harmonic combinations which enter into the musical system; it treats of cadences; of transition and modulation; of rhythmic and tonal structure; of passing-notes and arpeggiatura; and of the adaptation of music to words. The practice is shewn by copious examples, which include some elaborate compositions—amongst them a double chorus in eight real parts. Numerous exercises are given for the student's practice, and a Key to them accompanies the book.

The Second part treats entirely of COUNTERPOINT. The student is instructed in that system which admits the use of those intervals only which belong to the diatonic series of the two modes, and prohibits all dissonances except such as arise through suspensions and passing-notes: he is at the same time made acquainted with those modifications of the system required to meet the introduction of chromatic progressions and fundamental dissonances, the essential properties of contrapuntal composition being still preserved. The text is copiously exemplified; several of the examples are adapted to words: the Part concludes with a double quartet for voices. Conciseness has in each part been aimed at, not, however, at the expense of any details that might be useful to either the teacher or the student.

Very favourable notices of the Work have appeared in most of the leading Metropolitan Journals:—The Eclectic Review, Art Journal, Magazine of Science, Literary Gazette, Critic, Morning Post, Morning Herald, Court Journal, Bell's Life, Weekly Chronicle, Weekly News, Sunday Times, Weekly Dispatch, Illustrated News, &c., &c.
